*Merry Christmas
Happy
New Year*

It's the holiday season once again. My wife Susan, son Michael, daughter Melissa and I wish each and every one of you the merriest Christmas, the most festive Hanukkah, and a happy New Year....

This is a time of great joy and sharing visits and meals with friends and families as well as carrying on great time honored customs and traditions. It is a time of thanksgiving, sharing and reflection and remembering all those things, which truly matter. As we celebrate with our own loved ones, consider reaching out to those who may be alone this holiday season.

I look forward to the joyous chatter of the young and old alike; but especially the unspoken warmth and spirit that fill air all around us.

As we celebrate and count our blessings, let us be mindful of God our Father through whom all good things come. Let there be Peace on Earth, and may you find warmth and happiness with family and friends in the true spirit of the season.

Louisiana Agriculture & Forestry Today

2014 Ag Expo will be held Jan. 17-18 in West Monroe

It's an absolutely great day in Louisiana Agriculture, Forestry, and Aquaculture....

What a great year. Ag, forestry and aquaculture is up over 7 percent to a record $11.4 billion dollars.

Farm equity and land values continue to rise. Louisiana and farmers all over the country have had another record year. This year, we will export over $140 billion of agricultural products; a great deal of which will leave through Louisiana ports.

Overall since 1948 agricultural productivity increased approximately 1.5 percent per year to date. We have all been witness to the miraculous increases in production as a result of science, technology and innovation. This year's harvests are incredible by standards that were set just five and ten years ago.

Ag Expo is not only a celebration of agriculture, but it is also an exposition of the newest science and technology in equipment, seeds, and many other inputs. Visit the vendors and see all of the new trucks, tractors, four wheelers, supplies and gadgets. Learn about new ways to become more efficient and profitable.

Additionally, it is a showcase of many of our local products.

Come and see our young people compete in the livestock show.

There is something for everyone in the family from old tractors to the petting zoos and samples of all types of delicious foods, cheeses, and ice creams.

Come join me at the 2014 Ag Expo. The two-day event will be held Jan. 17 and 18 at the Ike Hamilton Expo Center in West Monroe, La.

USDA NRCS accepting applications for Conservation Stewardship program

Alexandria, December 3, 2013 –The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) is accepting applications for fiscal year 2014 enrollments in the Conservation Stewardship Program (CSP). Producers interested in participating in the program must visit their local NRCS office and apply by January 17, 2014.

"CSP helps farmers and ranchers already implementing conservation practices on their farm or ranch take their conservation efforts to the next level," said State Conservationist Kevin Norton. "When farmers and ranchers increase conservation efforts, everyone wins. We see cleaner and more abundant water, healthier soil, and better wildlife habitat—as well as improved agricultural production levels."

Lands eligible for the Conservation Stewardship Program include cropland, pastureland, rangeland, nonindustrial private forest land, and agricultural land under the jurisdiction of an American Indian tribe.

While local NRCS offices accept CSP applications year round, NRCS evaluates applications during announced ranking periods. To be eligible for this year's enrollment, producers must have their applications submitted to NRCS by January 17, 2014.

A CSP self-screening checklist is available to help potential applicants determine if CSP is suitable for their operation. The checklist highlights basic information about CSP eligibility requirements, contract obligations, and potential payments. It is available from local NRCS offices and on the CSP web page at: <http://www.nrcs.usda.gov/wps/portal/nrcs/main/national/programs/financial/csp/>.

or visit your local USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service office.

USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) helps America's farmers and ranchers conserve the Nation's soil, water, air, and other natural resources. All programs are voluntary and offer science-based solutions that benefit both the landowner and the environment.

La. farmers expected to benefit from new Baton Rouge port tenant

By Bruce Schultz
LSU AgCenter

PORT ALLEN, La. — South Louisiana grain farmers are expected to benefit from the presence of a new tenant at the Port of Baton Rouge, according to LSU AgCenter economist Mike Salassi. Salassi said having Louis Dreyfus Commodities as a new buyer in the area grain market is good for producers because of more competition. "Being a new additional market player on the buyer's side, the existence of Louis Dreyfus in the grain market should have a positive impact on producer prices, resulting from an increase in demand," Salassi said. "With the facility expansion currently being completed, Louis Dreyfus has the goal of significantly increasing the throughput at the facility to load grain on large ships for direct export."

The presence of Louis Dreyfus coincides with increased Louisiana grain production in the past few years, Salassi said. "Having local buyers with sufficient storage capacity to be able to easily handle these larger grain volumes is a tremendous advantage for growers in Louisiana."

Although the facility is operational, much of the expansion is ongoing or in the planning stages for more than $150 million in improvements.

"We've got another year of construction for sure," said David Bollich, commercial manager for Louis Dreyfus.

Bollich said that to build the new facilities, Louis Dreyfus had to shut down grain-handling operations after the 2011 harvest. Enough of the work was finished by late summer to receive and ship grain from this year's harvest.

The work completed so far involves construction of a state-of-the-art elevator and conveyor system designed to get grain off barges and onto ships as quickly as possible, as well as a new dock.

Two new sets of grain elevators capable of holding more than 1 million bushels are completed, and construction was just completed on another group of bins.

Some of the old facility, which had been operated by the previous tenant, Cargill, was left in place. "Everything painted blue is old," Bollich said.

The Baton Rouge Port Commission spent several million dollars renovating another set of large, older concrete bins.

Storage capacity is critical. Four large old steel grain bins remain in place, but they are terribly inefficient, taking days to unload 500,000 bushels. Grain stored in the cluster of six new bins, holding 70,000 bushels each, can be loaded onto a ship in less than an eight-hour day, Bollich said.

Building the concrete-and-steel bins required six days of around-the-clock work to build with non-stop concrete pouring. Before above-ground work began, 600 pilings, 120 feet long, had to be driven into the ground to make a sufficient foundation.

All the improvements were essential for the Port of Baton Rouge to remain a player in the grain export business, Bollich said. "You really couldn't compete in the export market with a facility as obsolete as this one was."

After reaching an agreement with the port, the company realized that a new dock would have to be installed at a cost of $30 million. More than 300 pilings, each 165 feet long, had to be driven into the riverbed to support the dock.

Bollich, who did marketing work for Louisiana Farm Bureau for 16 years before joining Louis Dreyfus, said the location at Mile 228 on the Mississippi River is a natural conduit for moving American grain to overseas markets. Farmers are able to truck their crop to the port. If they are farther up the river, they can load their grain onto barges to be moved downriver to the port.

"This is the geographic location to barge grain in this state," Bollich said. "If we develop our export business here, that's the best thing that could happen for the farmers."

Farmers trucking their grain to the facility will be able to get better prices because barge transportation will be eliminated, Bollich said.

The facility's rapid rate of loading grain will be important once the large Panamax ships, with a capacity for roughly 1.3 million bushels of grain, start sailing to the port. The larger ships require as much as 50 feet of water depth, the current depth at Baton Rouge, so maintaining a dredged Mississippi River will be critical, "not only at the channel, but also where the ship is going to be at the dock," Bollich said.

Being able to load an ocean-going vessel quickly makes shipping companies happy, and they are willing to pay a premium for rapid, problem-free loading.

Grain delivered by barge is weighed in the conveyor system after it is unloaded, and outgoing grain is weighed and graded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture before it is loaded onto ships at a total rate of 100,000 bushels.

"These are state-of-the-art loaders," Bollich said. "The dust suppression is tremendous."

In fact, little dust is found at the facility, thanks to a dust-collection system. Bollich said grain dust is kept and sold to feed companies.

The conveyor systems that move incoming grain from barges are separate from the system that transfers the outbound grain from bins to ships. Farmers who bring their grain to the facility won't notice much of a change in the truck dumps yet, but improvements are planned, Bollich said.
